

DRUG TESTING ON ANIMALS ESSAY

Free Essays from Bartleby | Animal testing is a controversial topic in today's society, and effectiveness of test drugs before proceeding to human clinical trials.

It began in the 17th century and the problem has progressed ever since. While many of them die, a few animals survive, but these unfortunate ones wish they could be put out of their misery as well. Since nearly BC, research and testing on living animals for human purpose has introduced hundreds of new medicinal and cosmetic advances for the human race. Major companies have turned their backs completely on animal testing and no longer use ingredients that were tested on animals and a number of animal tests have been completely replaced with superior, cheaper and more effective non-animal methods. New York: Oxford UP, These shows that even animals that are related to human can have significant differences. The benefits and improvements to modern medicine as a result of animal testing should be weighed heavily against the harmful and toxic ingredients used in such experiments and their detrimental effects on test subject When a drug failed in the humans trial, all the time and money that was spent on the experiment is lost which mean that more money and animals will be required to restart a new experiment. Since the procedures of the test have a high potential to cause physical Is Animal Testing Bad or Good? Animal Research is very customary nowadays, and it became a common and an accepted means of testing by the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Is there any reason that we need to develop a new shade of lipstick if we already have enough shades available? Reports show that at least 10 percent of these animals do not receive painkillers. As a result of animal testing, over a million animals die and continue to suffer during testing and other experiments PETA. Originating in ancient times, animal testing is still used today. The cosmetics line LUSH has been fighting over animals testing for over thirty years and will continue to fight for their right according to the company. Billions have been killed in the process. Physicians would dissect animals with the pure interest to obtain knowledge. Americans should reconsider their usage of animal testing due to the fact that humans have an improper advantage to animals. Animals need to stop being the center of laboratory and farm experiments, or at least given more rights to protect their general welfare and life. They are meant to be surrounded by loving caring humans who want to have a mutually beneficial relationship better them. Many scientists have accepted the fact that animal testing can be an essential contribution to discovering new medicine