

MORAL HUMAN SPIRITUAL VALUES IN

Morality not necessarily religious in nature: The concept of "spiritual values" is But "spiritual" can be as much about the human spirit as it is about the spirit of a.

Reasons why the distinctions between motive, intention, and act are important. A manager would seek to keep the environment clean and unpolluted by wastes from the business. Others needed to work. I am not certain there is any one or two motivations for the devotion to God of people like this, but sometimes it seems they are motivated to be good to those who can do them great good or harm, whether God or others in power. This seems particularly so if you consider the difference between creation and display. Health services were also provided free for all citizens. Then, of course, there is the problem of disagreement among religions, sects, and denominations about which pronouncements are the correct ones in the first place. Then one develops general principles and examines other non-controversial situations or issues in their light to see whether modifications need to be made in the principles. Perhaps even no disagreement. The values of truth, righteousness, peace, love and non-violence are found in all major spiritual paths. Spirituality has everything to do with morality. Moral laws can be understood as moral principles or as something like mathematical, logical, or scientific laws in the sense that they are discovered, not invented or fabricated. During the past 10 years Thailand had followed up and evaluated its national youth policies and programmes and also had amended the laws to catch up with the situation of youth. I had a really difficult time keeping from laughing as I made this sound more and more abusive, waiting for them to argue. I will discuss the real problems at the end of this essay. Moral laws are general, sometimes abstract, principles about how things ought to be; we discover them by persistent concerted scrutiny, using our collective moral sensitivity, understanding, judgment, and wisdom. We emphasise three principles: These human values do not need to be taught or learned; rather, they must be evoked or unveiled, sometimes by unlearning the ways we keep them hidden. Even seeing monuments in villages or in churches to the named members who died in past wars is a moving experience for those who never knew them - not because of the names themselves but because they each represent a lost life. These spiritual values are also human values and are the fundamental roots of a healthy, vibrant, and viable work career. The basic question is whether schools should be places that foster reflection and understanding in whatever areas they teach or whether they should be mere "training" facilities where students learn currently accepted specific facts and general practices and ideas. Being moral and spiritual helps us to stay grounded in a world that is less than. Those who are moral, understand what it means to be politically correct.
